Write-A-Thon allows us to offer The Boldface Conference to new writers (students as well as community members) by providing financial support. Donated funds are used to pay faculty, featured writers, staff, and for meals.

Community partners donate their time, gift certificates, and merchandise to the fundraising effort. Students write and make calls throughout the day of Write-a-thon.

BOLDFACE

Conference for
Emerging Writers

May 23-27, 2016

A week-long conference run by undergraduate writing students at the University of Houston. The focus is on helping new writers develop their craft and build community.

Featured writers discuss their experiences as writers and are available for manuscript consultations. Workshop faculty present talks on craft. Offsite readings take place in the evenings. On Friday, expert panels focus on professionalization and maintaining a writing practice.

Breakfast and lunch is included in the registration cost and housing is available. Scholarships are offered to institutions bringing groups to the conference. For eight years and counting, the conference has drawn emerging writers from around the country.

Our aim is to help new writers find a voice, a community, and a writing practice.
